The use of advanced multivariate statistical tools allows the simultaneous processing of field and molecular data. In addition, the postdoctoral researcher should have practical expertise in the use of molecular analytical techniques such as analytical pyrolysis (Py-GC/MS), high resolution mass spectrometry and stable isotope analysis (IRMS). He/she will also play a relevant role in the collection of soil samples after fires (participation in different sampling campaigns). In addition, the postdoctoral researcher will participate actively in the production of scientific articles and their publication in international journals, as well as their presentation in national and international congresses. It is also expected that he/she will participate in scientific dissemination activities, which were contemplated in the project, namely to the forest management community, other stakeholders and non-scientific society in general.
